Prayer by the Chaplain, Reverend Phillip Diaz.

O God, we come before You this day, and ask Your blessings upon all who are here in Your presence to be compelled to righteous and honorable efforts. I pray that You will guide and direct each and every soul as they serve the people of the great state of Nevada. Grant us wisdom; enable us with strength and courage to achieve the noble and selfless goals of this body, while remembering those that we represent from across our land. Let us look for divine purpose in the work that is accomplished here today and every day that we are granted, to reflect Your Great Name and all that is good which comes from above. Allow us to put aside anything that does not exalt and glorify Your greatness. Help us to seek true righteousness in our proceedings with our fellow man.

We are here today to dedicate our time and efforts to those that have in times past, and even now, continue to serve their fellow man and ensure the freedom and liberty that You have bestowed to us all. To all the veterans, servicemen and women of our great state, I ask that You give healing to their minds, bodies, and souls. Help us to honor their service and tremendous sacrifice by ensuring that their needs will never fail to be supplied. Help us to understand the true cost and burdens carried by our veterans, and let us endeavor to show them our gratitude by hearing their voices and showing genuine concern and action toward their cause. Above all, may all of our fellow citizens and communities be blessed with Your love and comfort guiding us throughout our days. We ask and pray all of this in Your great and most Holy Name.

AMEN.

MESSAGE TO THE LEGISLATURE OF NEVADA
EIGHTIETH SESSION, 2019

It is great to be here with all of you. I want to say first, thank you so much to the Governor. We had an incredible conversation today. Thank you, Lieutenant Governor, for having the time to meet with me. Thank you to the Senate President pro Tem Denis, Speaker Frierson, Majority Leaders Cannizzaro and Benitez-Thompson, Minority Leaders Settelmeyer and Wheeler. Thank you to my Congressional colleague Mark Amodei. It is good to see you, my friend. Let me just say thank you also to all the members of the Senate and Assembly for allowing me to address the Legislature this evening. It has been an incredible opportunity so far. I would also like to recognize our Constitutional Officers who are here and the Justices of the Nevada Supreme Court that I know represent us so well for all of their leadership. I would also like to recognize the dedicated men and women who work behind the scenes to support the Legislature and the executive officers and act as the solid foundation of our state's government. I have to thank all of you for your commitment to Nevada. I look forward to years of partnership as we work to address the challenges and opportunities facing our beloved state.

I do not have to tell all of you, we are so lucky to call ourselves Nevadans. Our state is blessed with pristine landscapes, abundant natural resources, world-class tourism, and growing economic diversity. But I think we would all agree that what makes the Silver State special is its people. From our world-class hospitality workers, to our industrious farmers and ranchers, to our servicemen and women, to our tech entrepreneurs, and our hardworking immigrant families, including DREAMers and TPS [Temporary Protected Status] recipients, Nevada's people make us strong.

Today, Nevada is among the most diverse states in America, and this Chamber is a reflection of that rich diversity. It is also a reflection of the power of Nevada's women. I have to tell you, as I walk the halls of Congress, I am proud to represent the first state with a female-majority Legislature and Supreme Court, and one of just a handful of states to be represented by two female United States Senators. Nevadans truly understand that our diversity is our strength. We understand that we all win when we work together. That is how innovative problem-solving happens. That is why the groundbreaking laws that are passed in this Legislature will improve the lives of Nevadans.

As legislators, we are working together each day to ensure that every Nevadan gets a fair shot at success. And while success looks different for every Nevadan, I think most of us would agree on the basics. Success is the peace of mind of a steady paycheck, a roof over one's head, and access to quality, affordable health care. It is being able to provide for your family and seeing your children do even better than you. It is being able to have a secure retirement and live out your golden years with dignity.

Sometimes ensuring Nevadans get a fair shot means working together to help those who are struggling, like the Marvel and Cartwright families. I met Pete Marvel and his wife in Beowawe during one of my annual rural tours. Many of you may know that Pete is a rancher, but he shared a story that will sound familiar to many Nevadans. Despite working hard, last year the Marvels saw their lives and their finances thrown into chaos by something completely out of their control: a wildfire, specifically, the Martin Fire. For Nancy Cartwright of Las Vegas, it was her late husband's unexpected cancer diagnosis. The Cartwrights struggled with the high cost of prescription drugs, hundreds of dollars a week. They lost their life savings and their home fighting cancer. When Nevadans face unforeseen hardship they need the support of their neighbors, their communities, and their government. And you know what? Working together, we help Nevadans like the Marvels and Nancy during their difficult times.

That is what I have set out to do in the United States Senate every day. I am working with my Republican colleagues and putting forth commonsense solutions that provide that fair shot for Nevada families. That is what I strive for as I meet Nevadans. From parents, to business owners, to conservationists, to miners, every voice is important; everyone has something to contribute. We may not always see eye to eye, and that is okay. What matters is our commitment to Nevada and our willingness to work together. It is our partnerships that can strengthen our state, keep us moving forward, and allow us to address the issues that matter most to Nevadans. We can build a healthier Nevada with greater opportunities for everyone. And it starts by listening.

The one concern I hear most as I travel across our state is that Nevadans are worried about not having access to health care; it does not matter if you are from Winnemucca, Las Vegas, West Wendover, or Reno. We must work together to strengthen our health care system, to make it more affordable and accessible, not work to dismantle it. Nevadans do not want to go back to the days when our state had one of the highest uninsured rates in the nation and you could be denied coverage for having a pre-existing condition.

I am proud that we are fighting together to ensure that does not happen in the Silver State, which is why I want to thank Attorney General Ford for working with Governor Sisolak and joining a lawsuit that is fighting attempts by Washington to take away the pre-existing conditions protections thousands of Nevadans rely on. And I commend the legislators here for working to strengthen protections and improve coverage for low-income children, and for working in a responsible way to achieve the goal for every Nevadan to have affordable health care. You understand that health care is the number one issue in Nevada. It does not matter if you are a Democrat or a Republican, we all want our families to be healthy. That is what this is about.

I am bringing that example with me to Washington, building on State Senator Yvanna Cancela's historic effort to bring greater transparency to drug pricing. As I sit on the Senate Finance Committee, I am proud to introduce bipartisan prescription cost reporting legislation to reduce drug costs for American taxpayers. I promise you this: I am committed to continuing to fight by your side to improve the Affordable Care Act and expand the number of health care options available to patients and families, especially in Nevada's rural communities. That is a commitment we all can make.

A healthy Nevada also means protecting our environment and our beautiful open spaces. This is one area in which our federal-state partnership has made the difference. There is no better example of our collaboration than Nevada's unified response to this Administration's decision to secretly ship plutonium to Nevada. Working with Nevada's delegation to provide oversight in Congress, I am holding the Department of Energy accountable for playing games with Nevada's safety. I made it clear that I am going to continue to object to the appointment of all nominees to the Department of Energy until I have a commitment from that Department that they will not send another shipment of plutonium to our state, and that they give us a timeline for the removal of the existing plutonium at the site. And when it comes to Yucca Mountain, we will continue working together to make Nevadans' voices heard on this issue and make sure Yucca Mountain stays dead.

But that is not the only threat we have seen in Nevada. Last year, our state experienced its share of wildfires that left environmental and economic devastation in their path. As I fight to ensure Nevada receives the federal assistance it needs to recover from these devastating wildfires, and as I fight to hold FEMA accountable for its negligent response to the Sugar Loaf Fire, I know that I have strong partners in the Nevada Legislature. I know that Assemblywoman Swank and Senator Goicoechea are leading the charge to find innovative solutions that contain wildfires early and make our landscapes more fire resilient.

And we are working across all levels of government to address the root cause of these natural disasters. I will say it: climate change. Whether it is coming together at the Tahoe Summit to strengthen key partnerships to protect Lake Tahoe or leading the nation in advancing renewable energy, we will continue to prioritize conservation while creating good-paying jobs for Nevadans. We will continue to follow the example of leaders like Assemblywoman Maggie Carlton and promote the growth of our outdoor economy.

Nevada is a leader in innovation. In the Senate, I have introduced legislation that ensures we continue to see strong economic development and job creation for Nevadans. My agenda is based on what I have seen right here in Nevada; I call it the Innovation State Initiative. I have developed legislation and fought for grant opportunities that encourage the development of smart technology, expand access to broadband in underserved communities throughout rural and urban Nevada, and put guardrails in place to protect workers and ensure the responsible use of technology that continues to diversify our economy. As part of this effort, I passed legislation to extend the Nevada UAS [Unmanned Autonomous Systems] test site for five more years and to create the Rural Broadband Integration Working Group, which will tackle barriers to the expansion of broadband in our rural communities. My bills will make sure Washington listens to the challenges and barriers rural communities are facing. Accessing broadband is vital for the economy of the future, for how our kids learn, for how our seniors can see their doctors, and for how our state continues to lead America in innovation and the smart and responsible use of technology.

It is so exciting what we are doing right here in Nevada. That being said, I also know that as we move into the twenty-first century, in this technological age, we must bring the workforce with us. That requires us to invest in workforce development to ensure that our children have the education to compete for jobs in their future and that our existing workforce has access to new training opportunities.

I recognize that rapid economic growth comes with growing pains for our state. That is why we are working together to find innovative solutions to one of Nevada's greatest challenges—ensuring hardworking families in our state can afford to live in their communities. If working families in Nevada are to have a fair shot, we must address the lack of affordable housing. Our state faces a shortage of 81,787 rental homes affordable for low-income renters. And families who could purchase a home are often priced out of the market. Affordable housing is key to providing stability and economic security for Nevada families, allowing them to build wealth and plan for the future. I know that Senator Ratti and others have led the fight for affordable housing here in Nevada, and they have been clear about where the federal government has fallen short. That is why I cosponsored the Affordable Housing Credit Improvement Act, legislation that would provide 1.3 million more affordable rental homes nationwide in the next ten years. And that is why I fought to bring federal funds to support Nevadans experiencing homelessness and to ensure the critical support agencies we have working in the state have the funds necessary to serve Nevadans who need a hand-up. I will continue to work with Senator Ratti and all of you to ensure that Nevada gets all of the resources and support it needs to tackle the housing crisis.

The challenges our state faces are many and great, but I believe we are up to the task. I am grateful to have you as partners as we work toward our goals. I know that we will continue to collaborate and innovate, and I look forward to fighting alongside members of the Nevada Legislature, our Governor, our Lieutenant Governor, and the constitutional officers to do right for the people of Nevada. Because when Nevadans have a fair shot at success, our communities, our economy, and our state thrive. Thank you for everything you are doing on behalf of this great state.

I have just one final thing to say. You should be proud of the work you are doing every single day. Every time you walk into this capitol, it is on behalf of the people of Nevada. I think about that when I walk into the nation's Capitol and I think about who we are representing. I am proud to see the diversity amongst all of you and I am proud to say that I am a Nevadan in this great Silver State. God bless all of you and the work that you do. Thank you. Have an incredible legislative session.
